

Question Q1.15

Air traffic controllers give instructions to airline pilots telling them in which direction they are to fly. These instructions are called “vectors.” If these are the only instructions given, is the name “vector” used correctly? Why or why not?

Solution

The name, “vector,” is not used correctly because no magnitude is given (that is, how fast the pilots should fly) with the direction.