

Question 12

Can the magnitude of a particle's displacement be greater that the distance traveled?

[TYPO: Replace "that" with "than."]

Solution

No, the magnitude of a particle's displacement can never be greater than the distance travelled. The magnitude of displacement can be equal to the distance travelled if the particle travels in a straight line; otherwise, the magnitude is less than the distance travelled.