

Question Q1.14

One sometimes speaks of the “direction of time,” evolving from past to future. Does this mean that time is a vector quantity? Explain your reasoning.

Solution

Time is not a vector quantity because it doesn't have components with respect to some basis. It's a scalar quantity that only has meaning when a reference point is chosen.